Watch over them day and night.

"My writing's scandalous! Can it still serve God?"

Flannery O'Connor was a rarity: a southerner and a devout Catholic. She died of Lupus in 1964 at the age of 39, but despite her short life, she is considered by many to be among the best writers of the 20th century. A new movie about her life and works, "Wildcat," opened May 3 in the US. Trailer; Catholic World Report

"It may be Flannery's greatest strength, as both a writer and a Catholic, that she considered people comprehensibly: dwarfed by pettiness, slaves to convention, even pawns of evil...but always redeemable, even if violence had to be the catalyst." Crisis Magazine

Her stories and novels are not light reading but they are thought-provoking and enrich our understanding of human nature and the working of God's grace in our lives.

What does is mean to say "I Believe" in our post-Christian world where God has been relegated to a tiny corner of our culture? This course includes lectures and discussion of Joseph Ratzinger's Introduction to Christianity. Following the Apostles' Creed, Ratzinger explores the mysteries of God, the Incarnation, and the Church. His aim is to lift us from our superficial modern culture into a deeper relationship with the Lord.

Kansas priest to be honored with a statue at the Kansas State Capitol

Servant of God Father Emil Joseph Kapaun, a Kansas native, a military chaplain, and a candidate for sainthood, died May 23, 1951, in a North Korean prisoner of war camp. He rejected numerous opportunities to escape and instead volunteered to minister to his fellow prisoners. He was awarded the Medal of Honor in 2013.
