Many of us can remember this slogan, but probably few know that the beginnings of the Culligan company can be traced to a desperate prayer offered at the side of a road in La Grange, Illinois. It was 1936, in the midst of the depression, when Emmet Culligan knelt on the road beside his car and asked for the grace to give up his ambition to be rich and asked only that he be able to take care of his family. His story, written by his son Fr Kevin Culligan, is a tribute to a beloved father and a faithful Catholic man. National Catholic Register

"Truth is worth pain and even conflict.

I may not just accept a lie in order to have quiet. For it is not the first duty of a citizen, or of a Christian, to seek quiet; but rather it is that standing fast by what is noble and great, which is what Christ has given us and which can reach as far as suffering, as far as a struggle that ends in martyrdom—and exactly in that way of peace."
